

10-port gigabit switch fiber optic ports

AI Overview

Yes, the DXS-1210 Series switch supports 10 Gigabit fiber optic connectivity via SFP+ ports. The DXS-1210 Series from D-Link includes models that provide 10 Gigabit connectivity over fiber using SFP+ ports, which are hot-pluggable transceivers capable of handling data rates up to 10 Gbps. These ports allow the switch to connect to fiber optic cabling, supporting both short-range multimode fiber (SR) and long-range single-mode fiber (LR) modules, depending on the SFP+ module installed. This makes it suitable for high-speed, low-latency network applications and long-distance connections, up to several kilometers for single-mode fiber.

Key Features of 10GbE Fiber Ports

- SFP+ Compatibility: The switch uses SFP+ slots, which can accommodate various fiber modules for different distances and wavelengths, including SR (up to 300 meters), LR (up to 10 km), and ER (up to 40 km).
- High Throughput: Fiber ports provide higher bandwidth and lower latency compared to copper 10GBASE-T ports, making them ideal for data centers and enterprise networks.
- Flexibility: SFP+ ports allow for modular upgrades, enabling network administrators to choose the appropriate fiber type and distance without replacing the switch.
- Network Management: The DXS-1210 Series supports Layer 2 features, port mirroring, VLANs, and link aggregation, ensuring efficient management of high-speed fiber connections.

Comparison with 10G Copper Ports

Unlike 10GBASE-T copper ports, which are backward compatible with 1G and 100M devices, 10 Gigabit fiber ports require compatible SFP+ modules and do not support lower-speed connections. Fiber switches are preferred for long-distance deployments and high-density networks, while copper switches are more economical for short-range or existing cabling infrastructure. In summary, if you need 10 Gigabit fiber connectivity, the DXS-1210 Series switch provides SFP+ ports that can be configured with the appropriate fiber modules to meet your network distance and performance requirements.
