

Durable tools for fiber optic cable stripping

AI Overview

Fiber optic cable stripping requires precision tools designed to remove coatings, buffers, and jackets without damaging the delicate glass fiber. Manual and Mechanical Strippers Manual fiber optic strippers are precision tools that remove polymer coatings such as acrylate, silicone, or polyimide from the fiber end, typically exposing 30–40 mm of bare glass without nicking or scratching it. These strippers are available in various hole sizes to accommodate standard telecommunication fibers (125 μm cladding, $\sim 250 \mu\text{m}$ coated diameter) and specialty fibers with thinner coatings. Mechanical strippers can also handle tight buffers (900 μm) and larger cable jackets, making them versatile for field installations. Thermal and Automated Strippers Thermal or automated stripping systems, such as the AutoStrip II, use controlled heat or patented burst technology to remove fiber coatings cleanly and consistently. These systems are ideal for mid-span window stripping, variable strip lengths, and high-volume production. They offer chemical-free operation, high first-pass yield, and built-in tensile testing to ensure fiber strength and cleanliness at magnifications up to 400x. Automated units can handle coating diameters up to 1,000 μm and allow precise control over stripping distance, temperature, and speed. Specialty Tools and Accessories Specialized tools include fiber cable slitters for removing outer jackets, fiber cleavers for precise endface preparation, and crimp tools for connectorization. Leading brands like Paladin Tools, Corning, AFL, and Jonard provide equipment for telecom, datacom, and IT applications, covering all aspects of fiber preparation, termination, and maintenance. Some tools are all-in-one, capable of stripping jackets, buffers, and coatings with high precision. Considerations for Choosing Tools Fiber type and coating: Ensure the stripper matc...
