

India Flame-Retardant Cable Tray Production

AI Overview

India produces a wide range of flame-retardant FRP/GRP cable trays using automated pultrusion processes, meeting stringent fire safety standards for industrial applications. Overview of FRP/GRP Cable Tray Production in India India's FRP (Fiberglass Reinforced Plastic) and GRP (Glass Reinforced Plastic) cable trays are manufactured primarily for industrial and infrastructure applications where corrosion resistance, electrical insulation, and fire safety are critical. Leading manufacturers include Ferrotech, Indiana Group, Indurotech, Pratik Cabletray, and Aeron Composite . These companies supply cable trays to sectors such as chemical plants, refineries, oil and gas industries, ports, power plants, and data centers. Production Process The pultrusion process is widely used in India for high-volume production of FRP cable trays. This involves: Pulling continuous glass fibers through a resin bath blended with fire-retardant thermoset resins. Pre-forming the section and removing excess resin. Passing the partially shaped section through a heated die to achieve the final geometry. Cutting the finished product to desired lengths using automated saws . This automated process ensures uniform quality, high strength, and cost-effective production for various tray sizes, typically ranging from 50 mm to 1000 mm in width and 3 mm to 5 mm in thickness . Types of Cable Trays Indian manufacturers produce multiple types of flame-retardant cable trays to suit different applications: Ladder Type: Open rungs for maximum airflow, ideal for heavy-duty power and control cables . Solid Bottom Type: Provides full protection for sensitive data and communication cables . Trough Type: Half-enclosed with slotted or punched bottoms for ventilation . Channel Type: Economical solution for instrumentation wiring and short cable runs . Wire Mesh Type: Lightweight, suitable for telecom and data center...
