

Price of Small Operation Distribution Box

AI Overview

The price of a small operation distribution box typically ranges from $10 to $50 per unit, depending on specifications, certification, and installation type.

Pricing Overview Small distribution boxes, such as single-phase or DIN rail-mounted units, are generally the most affordable type of electrical enclosures. Basic models without certification or advanced features can cost around $10–$20, while certified units (e.g., IEC61439) or those with enhanced safety and insulation features may cost 20–30% more, bringing the price closer to $30–$50 per unit. Installation costs can add an additional $10–$30 per unit for embedded or assembled types, depending on labor rates and complexity.

Factors Affecting Price

- Certification and Safety Standards: Certified boxes are more reliable and safer, increasing the cost.
- Material and Construction: Flame-retardant, conductive, or weather-resistant materials raise the price.
- Number of Circuits and Poles: More circuits or poles require larger or more complex boxes, increasing cost.
- Installation Type: DIN rail-mounted boxes are easier to install and may be slightly cheaper than embedded units.
- Brand and Manufacturer: Reputable brands like Siemens, ABB, or Chint may charge premium prices due to quality and reliability.

Example Products

- DIN Rail Terminal Distribution Box: Small, single-phase, 4-in/24-out configuration, priced around $15–$25, suitable for compact wiring setups.
- Standard Residential Single-Phase Box: Basic plastic enclosure for home use, typically $10–$20.
- Certified Industrial Small Box: IEC61439 certified, higher durability, priced $30–$50.

In summary, for a small operation distribution box, expect to pay $10–$50 per unit, with the final cost influenced by certification, material, number of circuits, and installation requirements.
