

Price of busbar for argon arc welding machine

AI Overview

The price of a busbar for argon arc welding machines typically ranges from around $300 per ton for basic aluminum busbars to higher prices depending on material, size, and supplier. Pricing Overview Busbars for argon arc welding machines are commonly made from aluminum (1060 or 6061 alloys) or copper, offering low resistance, corrosion resistance, and ease of welding. A reference price for a cathode busbar used in a 175 kA electrolyzer is $302.56 per ton in New York, which provides a baseline for industrial-grade busbars. Prices for smaller or specialized busbars may vary significantly depending on dimensions, thickness, and fabrication method. Factors Affecting Cost Material Type: Aluminum busbars are generally less expensive than copper but may have lower conductivity. Copper busbars are more costly but offer superior electrical performance. Size and Thickness: Larger or thicker busbars increase material costs. Welding and Fabrication: Argon arc welding adds labor and equipment costs, especially for custom shapes or assemblies. Supplier and Location: Prices vary by manufacturer, shipping fees, and regional market conditions. Quantity: Bulk orders may reduce per-unit cost, while single-piece orders are more expensive. Supplier Options Alibaba offers aluminum busbars suitable for argon arc welding, with shipping and delivery fees negotiable. IndiaMART lists busbar assemblies for welding machines, typically requiring direct inquiry for pricing. Local industrial suppliers may provide custom busbars with quotes based on specifications. Recommendation To obtain an accurate price for your specific argon arc welding machine, it is best to contact suppliers directly with the required material, dimensions, and quantity. This ensures you account for fabrication, shipping, and any additional assembly costs.
