

The traction machine pulled off the optical cable

Overview

Fiber Optic Puller used for the construction of fiber optic cable pipelines. A cable traction device is a mechanical system designed to pull optical fibers, communication cables, or power lines through conduits, ducts, or aerial pathways with controlled tension and minimal damage. Unlike manual pulling methods that rely on human strength and risk kinking or over-stretching. The invention relates to the field of electronic information communication equipment, and discloses an optical fiber traction device capable of adjusting tension and preventing tension loss, which comprises a main body box, wherein a friction block cavity is arranged in the main body box, an. The Apex 9 is a diesel-powered optical cable tractor featuring a vibrant green body with reinforced crawler transmission. Shop our range of durable, high-performance solutions for various applications. Designed for telecom field operations, it delivers 4200N pulling force with dual control options (panel + remote) for efficient cable. The invention discloses an end head traction device for erecting an optical cable in communication engineering.
