

What size router should I pair with a 100W fiber optic connection

AI Overview

For a 100 Mbps fiber optic connection, a router supporting at least 1 Gbps throughput with Wi-Fi 5 (AC) or Wi-Fi 6 (AX) is recommended. Router Speed and Standards To fully utilize a 100 Mbps fiber connection, your router should support gigabit speeds (1 Gbps or higher) on its WAN and LAN ports, ensuring no bottleneck between your ONT and devices. Modern routers with Wi-Fi 5 (AC) or Wi-Fi 6 (AX) standards provide sufficient wireless throughput for multiple devices, low latency, and better coverage. Wi-Fi 6 routers also offer improved efficiency with technologies like OFDMA and MU-MIMO, which are beneficial if you have many connected devices. Coverage and Range Choose a router with coverage suitable for your home or office size. Dual-band routers (2.4 GHz and 5 GHz) are typically sufficient for most households, while tri-band routers can help in larger spaces or high-density environments. Position the router centrally to maximize Wi-Fi coverage and minimize dead zones. Ports and Connectivity Ensure the router has at least 4 Ethernet LAN ports for wired connections to devices like PCs, gaming consoles, or smart TVs. Use Cat6a or higher Ethernet cables between the ONT and router to maintain optimal speeds and reduce signal degradation. If your ISP provides an ONT, connect it to the router's WAN port; some routers may also support SFP or fiber-ready ports for direct fiber connections. Recommended Router Models For a 100 Mbps fiber connection, routers like the TP-Link AX1800 Archer AX21 or similar Wi-Fi 6 models are ideal, offering combined speeds above 1.8 Gbps and features like beamforming for better coverage. For higher performance or future-proofing, consider routers with multi-gigabit support such as the NETGEAR Nighthawk Tri-Band WiFi 7 (RS700S), which can handle faster connections and multiple high-demand devices.
